

The license waiver for LightSquared must be contingent on results of a study. The study must show no interference with GPS. If tests show interference, it is LightSquared's obligation to resolve them.

LightSquared must understand that it is proceeding at its own risk. LightSquared is a private company financed by a hedge fund, and as a taxpayer I owe them no special obligation in this matter.

GPS users should not have to modify existing GPS equipment. The GPS system constitutes a national utility of inestimable value to many industries.

There must be a reasonable opportunity for public comment of at least 45 days on the report produced by the working group. The majority of FCC commissioners need to agree on any further action. This is a matter of vital national interest.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

-Eric Anderson